

ABSTRACT

The cross phase modulation generated by a fiber amplifier is compensated for by converting the amplitude variations of the wavelength-division multiplex signal (WMS) into an electrical signal which controls a phase modulator (2) in such a manner that the signal distortion caused by cross phase modulation is compensated for.